IN THE GARDEN

ATLANTA (March 10, 2026) — Throughout its half-century, the Atlanta Botanical Garden has complemented its lush plant displays with artful accents, from Japanese lanterns and gushing fountains to sprawling special exhibitions of sculptures by renowned artists, from Henry Moore to Dale Chihuly.

This year marks the Garden's 50th anniversary, and to celebrate that rich history, the Garden will present a revival of its 2006 sculpture exhibit, Niki in the Garden, May 9 – September 6.

The new exhibit will feature 42 works in what's believed to be the largest showing of Niki de Saint Phalle's work ever presented in North America. The late French-American artist was best known for her massive, playful sculptures, particularly her "Nanas" — voluptuous works of women that celebrate femininity — as well as whimsical animals, mythical figures, totems and even sports heroes.

"What better way to celebrate the Garden's golden jubilee and its quarter-century tradition of bringing great art set amongst nature to Atlanta than an encore exhibit of Niki?" said Mary Pat Matheson, the Garden's President & CEO. "The joyous nature of her work lends the perfect accent for marking our 50th year."

De Saint Phalle, who died in 2002, worked with a diverse range of materials, including fiberglass, resin, mosaic glass, ceramic tiles, mirror pieces, bronze, concrete and even found objects.

During the exhibit, the mostly whimsical sculptures — most on loan from the Niki Charitable Art Foundation and private collections — will be staged throughout the Garden as well as indoors. They range in size from the 2,000-pound Grande Step Totem and 16.5-foot Large Yelling Man Totem to small wall hangings of reliefs only 2 feet square.

Visitors who experienced the 2006 exhibit will be dazzled by encountering the Star Fountain (Blue) “Nana once again holding court in Cox Courtyard as well as the joyously iconic Les Trois Grâces Fontaine, Three Graces Fountain, frolicking in the Skyline Garden pond.

In addition, an interpretive exhibit on the artist and her work will be on display in the Fuqua Orchid Center gallery.
